This workshop will focus on mechanical and interfacial properties of hard materials such as metals and ceramics, used as replacements for hard biological materials such as bone and teeth. These hard materials must provide structural support for surrounding tissues, but must also integrate with them. Strategies to promote such integration will be discussed.